

Environmental Protection Announces 2021 New Product of the Year Winners

DALLAS, October 20, 2021 – Environmental Protection has announced the winning companies in its 2021 New Product of the Year contest. The contest attracted a wide variety of products and services, all created with environmental sustainability in mind. The judges declared ties in three categories this year: Monitoring, Software/SaaS, and Soil and Groundwater. TerraCycle Regulated Waste’s Bulb Eater 3 and Onset’s HOBOnet Multi-Depth Moisture Sensor each won in two categories.

“We had a great group of entrants for our Environmental Protection New Product of the Year contest this year. The steady stream of products and services entered each year shows manufacturers' commitment to exceptional environmental performance and compliance with environmental regulations,” Environmental Protection Editor Sydney Shepard said. “The innovation and solution-driven technologies highlighted in our list of 2021 New Product of the Year winners shows how this industry continues to evolve in the face of deepening environmental issues.”

Entries were judged in nine different categories including: Overall Value, Ease of Use, Innovation, Special Features and Quality. Judges scored products one through five in each category, and the entrant with the highest overall score was awarded in that category.
